What is the Karuk Tribe Comprehensive Economic Development Strategy?

A Comprehensive Economic Development Strategy (CEDS) is a planning tool created by the United States Economic Development Administration (EDA) to facilitate regional economic development and make regions and Tribes eligible for EDA funding opportunities. The CEDS provides a road map for the Tribe to pursue other organizational goals and objectives related to economic development and self-sufficiency.

The development of a CEDS establishes an actionable plan for economic growth and ensures that the Karuk Tribe (Tribe) will be competitive when applying for EDA and other federal funding. Funding opportunities through these resources can pay for planning, infrastructure projects, and other programs to promote economic development and self-sufficiency for the Tribe.

A CEDS plan aims to assist the Tribe in establishing regional priorities for projects and investments and is often required for federal funding.

The Tribe intends to submit the CEDS thirty (30) days after public notice. The Tribe will accept written comments by email or by mail to the addresses listed above.
